ACT I

The action begins about the middle of the eighteenth century on the village green of a Dutch community in the Catskills.

Here Nicholas Vedder, landlord of the Inn, has two daughters, Katrina and Peterkee. The elder—Katrina—a buxom but shrewish girl, is betrothed to Rip Van Winkle, a happy-go-lucky vagabond of the village; Peterkee, still a child in her early teens, attends the school of Derrick Van Bummel, whose son Jan, a stuttering foolish fellow, desires Katrina's hand for himself and is favored by Nicholas on account of his property.

The wedding settlement between Katrina and Rip, however, is ready to be signed, when Derrick enters dragging in Peterkee as a culprit whom Rip has lured away to play hookie from school with the other children. Clad in ragged Dutch trousers and carrying a fishpole, Peterkee admits that, at Rip's instigation, she has been fishing with plumcake for a mermaid in a mountain brook. At this moment Rip himself appears with the school children, flying a kite. Absorbed in his play with them, he has totally forgotten his wedding engagement with Katrina, who berates him fiercely and leaves him bewildered and crestfallen, while Peterkee is taken by her father to be punished in the Inn.

A Goose-girl now cheers up Rip, by getting him to join her and the children in a dance, which is terminated by an approaching thundershower, as Peterkee—escaped from her father's punishment—hastens to Rip to be comforted. Listening to the thunder, Rip tells her and the children the legend of Hendrick Hudson and his Crew, how every twenty years they return in their ghostly ship, the Half Moon, to hold a bowling party in the mountains. At the climax of his tale, with a great thunderclap, Hendrick Hudson himself appears in a sunshine shower. All take flight but Rip and Peterkee, whom Hendrick invites to his midnight party to play at ninepins, when he promises to give Rip a magic flask as a wedding gift. At this, Rip turns exultantly to Katrina, who is reëntering, but as she comes, Hendrick vanishes. Rip tells her of Hendrick's offer, but Katrina, mocking Rip's credulity, tells him to return with his magic flask by the morrow's sundown or she will marry Jan. Rip replies confidently—and Peterkee says she will help him find the flask. The voice of Hendrick is heard calling, and amidst the storm Rip and Peterkee set forth together for the mountains.

ACT II

(Scene 1.) Stopping at Rip's hut after the storm to make preparations for their journey, Rip and Peterkee continue their way (Scene 2) by a dusky footpath, up the mountain, attended by fairy voices of calling Katydid and the plaintive cry of the Whippoorwill. So they encounter

Dirck Spuytenduyvil, mate of the Half Moon, carrying two kegs of liquor, which Rip helps him to carry to the mountain peak.

(Scene 3.) There, by moonlight, are gathered Hendrick Hudson and his ghostly crew, who welcome them to their bowling party, during which Hendrick and Dirck plot to bring about the future wedding of Rip to Peterkee, instead of to Katrina, by detaining Rip on the mountain till their return after twenty years. To this end, Peterkee is allowed to win the magic flask in a bowling match with Dirck, who then conducts her down the mountain, saying Rip will follow, while Rip—absorbed and delighted in his play of lightning and thunder—is plied with a sleeping-potion, the ninth draught of which overwhelms him with slumber, just as the golden Half Moon comes sailing into view on the air, manned by the ghostly sailors, singing him a lullaby of farewell.

ACT III

(Scene 1.) At sunrise, on the mountain peak, Rip is awakened by fairy presences of nature, who take flight as he stirs. Rising painfully, he is bewildered to find himself old, white-bearded and weather-beaten. Calling on Peterkee, he disappears in the mists, from which now emerge into view (Scene 2) the ruined chimney and walls of Rip's hut, entangled with vines and shrubbery. Here Peterkee, now a young woman, in bridal clothes, comes searching for the magic flask. Finding it in the chimney niche where she left it, she reveals how she tasted its enchanted waters of youth and prays that Rip, so long lost, may yet return to his home. Ancient and strange, Rip himself appears before her like a "fairy goblin." In their scene together they are on the point of recognition, when old Nicholas enters, chiding Peterkee for running away from the wedding at sundown and, despite Rip's protest, hurries her off with him, leaving Rip to a sadly mystified soliloquy by his ruined hearth.

(Scene 3.) But now, on the village green by the Inn, Hans Van Bummel, younger brother of Jan, is about to be wedded to Peterkee, who has stubbornly refused to marry for these twenty years past, during which Katrina and Jan have reared a large family of their own. Now, as Nicholas comes with Peterkee, and the ceremony is about to proceed, barking dogs and hooting children announce the entrance of old Rip, who comes claiming his promised bride at sundown.

Mocked and struck down as an intruding beggar, he is befriended by Peterkee, who gives him as alms the magic flask. As Rip puts this to his lips, lightning and thunder prelude the reappearance of Hendrick Hudson and his crew, who—to miraculous organ-peals—troop forth in wedding raiment from the church, as Rip appears in the fairy light restored to his youth. Rigid as ninepins the aghast Dutch folk are bowled into oblivion, as Rip and Peterkee are united in their wedding at sundown.

ACT I

Introduction

It is a sleepy, old-timey scene: a small village green, shaded by an immense elm; on the left, a rustic Inn; on the right, a quaint Church, with porch; between them— vistas of cloud-flecked mountains and a blue-green river-valley. Near the church— a fountain, where Women of the village gather to do their washing.

On wooden benches by the Inn old Men sit basking in the sunshine. Lazily from their long pipes they puff little clouds of tobacco smoke.

Scene III

As the lonely cry of the Whippoorwill dies away, the darkness begins to be filled with contrasted sounds of gaiety and hubbub, in the rhythm of a lively dance-tune, as returning light reveals the scene of Act I at the hour of approaching sunset.

Allegro vivace ($\text{♩} = 108$)

The Scene itself is altered somewhat by the lapse of time. The church and its porch are partly overgrown with ivy; the tree which shades the Inn is visibly larger: over the door of the Inn floats a flag with thirteen stars, and a new swinging sign—painted with a crude portrait of an officer in uniform—shows the lettered Inscription:

The General Washington Inn

The place, moreover, has none of the drowsy quietude of the First Act, but bustles with a new energy. People in garments of an altered fashion are gathered together: some, in gossipy pantomime, are standing by the church porch; others, near the Inn, are watching a group of wedding guests, who are dancing—to the music of fiddling—about the bridegroom, Hans Van Bummel, a sort of second edition of his brother Jan. Hans—blindfolded in their midst—is being spun round and put through various motions by the dancers, as they and the onlookers sing in chorus, clapping their hands at three intervals.

After the first interval, the Best Man is thrust—also blindfolded—into the circle; after the second, both are put through pantomime indicated by the words of their song, then—unblindfolded—are thrust out of the circle, amid laughing shouts, after the final refrain.
